

There where nothing is certain and everything remains open

Quote:

“The power of connectivity may be experienced at many moments and in many ways. If you search attentively, you will find it everywhere. For example, when you attend a multicultural festival or (perhaps for the first time) take part in a demonstration for peace. Or if you assemble a friendship book for the 50th birthday of a dear friend.”

Explanation of the choice:

Sometimes connection feels like a powerful current that carries us effortlessly, and at other times only a thin, fragile thread remains. Yet it is often that delicate thread that guides us through the moments when everything is under strain.

I choose to keep seeking and safeguarding that connection — even when I cannot fix anything, cannot ease the situation, bring relief, and can offer nothing more than being close. Because sometimes simply holding on to that single thread is already a gift we can give to each other.
