Quote

*“How can the miracle be understood?” In our foundational statement, there is a sentence that touches on this: Because we believe that all life stems from the same source, we want to see each person as equal and continually search for that which connects us. That means we are talking about every person: nearby or far away, in distance or feeling. Does this foundation statement transform into an attitude from which love and dignity can be experienced? How so? What does this ask of me in my everyday life?
Do I really know the people I encounter?”*
